The Way Of The Dream

Towards the end of her long and distinguished career Marie-Louise von Franz filmed a series of discussions on life and the dynamics of the unconscious. Shot in 1985 by Fraser Boa, a Canadian film director and Marion Woodman's brother, who studied analytical psychology under Marie-Louise von Franz at the CG Jung Institute in Zurich, the films capture her unique wisdom, which Boa intercuts with people on the street recounting dreams.

The films offer

- an explanation of meaning in dream
- the professional insights of a great therapist
- a view of the many pathways to individuation and self-integration
- understanding of archetypal life patterns
- guidance on the necessity of experiencing inner darkness as part of the road towards light
- insight into gender differences

One of the most remarkable women of the 20thC, MARIE-LOUISE VON FRANZ was an 18 year old classicist when she first met the CG Jung, 40 years her senior. Deciding later to pursue analytical psychology she became respected internationally as much for her forensic psychotherapeutic skills as for encyclopaedic knowledge of archetypal symbolism. Von Franz, who later founded the CG Jung Institute, conducted extensive research into the psychological significance of alchemy, fairy tales, and made a particular study of the evolution of human consciousness from its tribal roots to the nuclear individualism of the present day. <http://marie-louisevonfranz.com/en/>

Shortly after they were released these films were caught up in an extended legal wrangle that followed Boa's untimely death, and have only recently become available again. Michael Maxwell Steer, organiser of this screening, is one of those whose life was changed by similar intensive 20 years ago. A composer and writer who was a coordinator of the Big Green Gathering, he is now delighted to make the profound insights in these films available to others.

These films are a must-see for anyone interested in relating psychological well-being and inner process – in particular those giving or receiving psychotherapy.
